Former student Mary Waterbury found strangled

By Craig Andrews
Staff writer

The body of a former Cal Poly student was found strangled to death Monday morning in Montano de Oro State Park.

The partially-clothed body of Mary Catherine Waterbury, 23, of San Luis Obispo was located by helicopter about 10 a.m. Monday by Sheriff's Search and Rescue.

An autopsy determined Waterbury was sexually assaulted.

Waterbury was enrolled at Cal Poly from summer 1984 to spring 1985 as a liberal studies major. She was a junior at the time of her last enrollment and had transferred to Cal Poly from St. Mary's College.

Waterbury was reported missing by her roommate to the San Luis Obispo Police Department Sunday afternoon. Waterbury's brother, Chris, found a 1971 yellow Volkswagen, which Waterbury had been driving, parked on the west side of Pecho Road about one mile inside Montano de Oro State Park. The vehicle belongs to Waterbury's sister, Julie, a Cal Poly student.

Sheriff's Search and Rescue units searched the park Sunday evening for Waterbury and resumed the search Monday morning. Waterbury occasionally went to the park, her roommate said.

Lisa A. Blair, a friend of Waterbury's and a journalism senior at Cal Poly, said, "She was a nice girl; that's why I can't understand why anyone would want to hurt her." Blair said she had known Waterbury for about the past four years.

Sheriff's officials are asking that anyone who saw Waterbury or the car after 2 p.m. on Saturday contact the Sheriff's Department.

Concert backer called negligent by county

By Marc Meredyth
Staff writer

San Luis Obispo County wants the promoter of the Oct. 10 punk rock concert to pay for damage to the Veterans Memorial Building, caused when police forcefully dispersed the audience of about 700.

The complaint for damage, filed by County Counsel James Lindholm Jr., accuses dance promoter Morris Samuel and the R&R Security company of general negligence.

Jac Crawford, assistant county counsel, said the suit was filed so taxpayers wouldn't have to foot the bill for the damages. He said the fees the county charges for the hall are mainly to cover the administrative costs of renting the building.

These fees aren't adequate for covering unforeseen costs such as the repairs the hall now needs. The suit is hopefully going to pay for the repairs, Crawford said, so the money doesn't have to be taken from local property tax revenues.

Lindholm told the Telegram-Tribune last week that when the county rents out a facility it expects it to be returned in the same state. "We simply expect the parties who have responsibility to pay," Lindholm said.

Crawford added that Samuel had a contract by which he promised to return the premises in the same condition he found them and to provide adequate security for the hall. He broke that contract, Crawford said.

The concert was supposed to feature the San Francisco Bay Area punk bands Dead Kennedys and Special Forces, but police were called to the concert following the performances of the warm-up bands.

When some concert fans hurled bottles and rocks at the police, the officers used water from high pressure fire hoses to disperse the crowd. Twenty-one people were arrested on charges of assault and failure to disperse.

Poly student on ticket for City Council

By Susan Harris
Staff writer

First in a series

The main concern of San Luis Obispo City Council candidate Paul Lewis is that the views of students are taken into account by the council.

"With 10,000 students in a city of 35,000, the students don't have any representation on Council," said Lewis. "The student concerns aren't being met and looked at."

He said the city council should realize how much students contribute to the community.

"San Luis Obispo is privileged to have the university next door," said Lewis.

Another issue Lewis would like to address as a councilmember is the question of independent housing, also known as Greek row.

"The houses don't need to be just fraternity and sorority houses," Lewis said. He said he'd like to see an international house built for students visiting from abroad, as well as housing for special interest groups.

"The Greek community is the spearhead group. They're the movers and the shakers of the proposal."

Although he has no particular plan for where the buildings would be located, he emphasized the need for City Council support of the project.

"The city has to provide the water and the sewage," said Lewis.

Another issue concerning Lewis is the possible expansion of California Mens Colony.

"The state is using our county as a dumping ground," he said.

With proposed expansion of CMC comes the problems of city growth, lack of housing and — his main concern — the politically-hot issue of water resources.

voir Canyon, Lewis said, "If we lose the water we get from over the (Cuesta) Grade, we won't have any water."

"The water problem needs to be studied and researched more."

Lewis said that growth and possible urban sprawl are other important issues for the election.

San Luis Obispo County, Lewis said, is the fastest growing county in the state. "And this growth affects all of the cities in the county."

"If we have well designed plans, we can have the growth. We have to be ready for it."

He said his biggest worry is that the city will be shocked by the growth that he sees in the next 10 to 20 years.

Stressing the importance of research and study, he said, "We must get our plans down."

Lack of communication was the reason behind student hostility directed at the City Council for the alcohol ban and the noise ordinance, said Lewis.

"It's not the ordinances that are important," Lewis said, "but the procedure on how they were put through."

"Students have plenty of other places to go to drink."

"By clearing up the confusion and misunderstanding between the students and the rest of the citizens, we can work for a better San Luis Obispo together."

Generosity appreciated

'Where have all the flowers gone'

— Peter, Paul and Mary

It wasn't flowers that a group of concerned faculty and students were planting behind the dorms last weekend, but it will be just as beautiful when the rains come.

More than 28 people, over the past two weekends, have been donating their time and energy to help reseed a firebreak that was cut during the Las Pilitas fire last summer.

The seeding was done in an effort to prevent erosion on the hillsides when winter rains come to San Luis Obispo. Through their hard work, this group of volunteers have taken a major step in keeping our campus looking beautiful and clean.

A mixture of rye, oat and brome seeds were planted in the cleared area and should act as a strong groundcover and keep the hillsides in place. The seeds were donated by the School of Agriculture and the Natural Resource Management department loaned the group all the necessary tools to get the job done right.

Our most recent rains illustrate the importance of this most generous action. A hillside without plants can be disastrous when it rains.

It is people like these dedicated students and faculty that make a real difference here at Cal Poly. Generosity of this nature should not go unnoticed.

We commend these people for their unselfish action and their dedication to our campus. We can only hope that other students and faculty members will be motivated to further action.

Hats off to all of those individuals who volunteered their time to this most worthy cause. Keep up the good work; it won't soon be forgotten.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Brady column creates false stereotypes

Editor — I disagree with certain points in Mr. Brady's column in the October 17 Mustang Daily entitled, "Beware the Politics of Us and Them."

The point of this article is that groups by nature breed elitism and discrimination, and one example the author uses is that of a "fundamentalist" church. The author uses the example of Jim, who is labeled by his church as sinful and headed for hell because he stopped attending services. I would doubt that this example is a factual one, but rather born of the misconceptions of the church common in today's society. No church I have gone to, nor any church I have had contact with, used the approach to members who fall away from the family. To say that "all member-only organizations by nature discriminate" is creating a stereotype; the nature of the church is to increase its membership, not exclude outsiders. Perhaps the author equates the term "fundamentalist" with "uncaring" or "unforgiving", but all this movement entails is belief in "the literal infallibility of the Scriptures." If I stop going to church, the Church leaders contact me and try to help.

There is nothing wrong with the need to belong to a group — it is an inherent human trait. Nor are all these groups "pseudo-family"; my church family is as real to me as my biological one. Of course, common sense tells us to be careful as to which group we select, but to be skeptical of the love and sense of family found in a church is simply paranoia. I believe the article is in error when it looks for similarities between such groups as Nazism and Christianity. It is laughable to compare the two, and I for one will not be worried about my need to belong having read Mr. Brady's article.

Reporters cross 'lines' to keep us informed

Editor — This is addressed to Bob Stephens (Thursday, Oct. 7 — Letter to the Editor). If reporters didn't cross police lines, war zones and various other boundaries, the people in this world would sit in the dark as society tumbled blindly down. Reporters are society's mediators; they are here to inform us who is doing wrong or right. Also who to trust.

GUY STEWARD

Student stands behind opinion of Greeks

Editor — I am writing in response to a group who calls themselves "The Concerned Fraternity Society." In last Thursday's Mustang Daily 'On the street' column, I was asked my opinion on the Cal Poly Greek system. Incidentally, I was the only one who more or less "put down" the Greeks. On Monday, Oct. 21, I found flyers around campus with my picture on them. Underneath it read "Don't let having a good time destroy your appearance like it did to this person." Around all this, the huge statement "Warning — Don't Punk" was printed. "Don't Punk"? What does this mean? It's like saying "Don't Frat" or "Don't Sorority".

I luckily have a very good sense of humor. I was amused and got a good laugh out of the whole thing. I could find out who the responsible party is and sue for slander if I wanted to. But, it's not worth wasting my time.

However, because of this occurrence, there are a few points I would like to make pertaining to the entire incident. I was approached by the Mustang Daily for my opinion on a subject. I therefore gave my opinion. I would also like to stress that although I meant for my answer to be a little sarcastic, I didn't really do believe what I said. Somebody had to say it. But it strikes me as very interesting that in lashing back at me, "The Concerned Fraternity Society" (whoever they are) cut me down for my "appearance." What does this have to do with a person's self? Obviously, they must have felt quite insecure if they couldn't even think of any other reason to pick on me. In putting them down in my opinion statement, I didn't address their appearances whatsoever. Isn't it a person's "insides" that count? I was making a conclusion based on things I've experienced. Yes, I have been to frat parties where crowds stand 20 feet away from hired dance bands and just drink beer. I've seen Greeks in the silk-screening room making T-shirts for all their theme parties. I've always wondered what the importance of having a T-shirt for every party was. I won't go into my other detailed experiences, but basically, I'll sum it all up in saying that, yes, in my opinion, it is a social joke.

I mean — how many Greeks do you see participating in serious, meaningful clubs like Students for Social Responsibility? You guessed it — none. If there are some involved in the club, please accept my apology, but I'm a member and have never seen you at any meetings.

All I'm trying to say, is that whoever it was that cut down my appearance — I feel sorry for you. It shows ignorance on your part. Ignorance as to what life is all about. Believe it or not, I do have a lot of Greek friends but I see them as individuals, not part of a group. I just hope that maybe someday you'll set down your beers, come out the the silk-screen room and open your minds. If not — what can I say? You're the ones missing out. I may be (according to you) "destroying my appearance," but you are right about one thing — "I am having a good time."

I would like to thank the A Lab "BALA" for their flyer — it's good to know that there are people with reasonable mentalities at this school.

Police statement after 'riot' tells real story

Editor — C. Kevany's letter of Tuesday, Oct. 22, which states that the police acted fairly, in their own defense, and without any alternative during the "Vet's Hall riot" is inaccurate. A review of the police statement will show that after the crowd did not disperse, officers began to clear the hall. At this point, their aggressive actions were offensive and intended to move an unruly but relatively peaceful crowd outside. Any intelligent person understands that in the anonymity of a crowd, certain persons may tend to behave irrationally, i.e. throw bottles at armed police. The police failed to recognize, or recognized and ignored this.

Thought for the day...

The body of every organization is structured from four kinds of bones. There are the wishbones, who spend all their time wishing someone would do the work. Then there are the jawbones, who do all the talking, but little else. The knucklebones knock everything anybody else tries to do. Fortunately, in every organization there are also the backbones, who get under the load and do most of the work.

Soviets charged with violation

WASHINGTON (AP) — Defense Secretary Caspar W. Weinberger charged Tuesday the Soviet Union has begun deploying a new mobile nuclear missile in violation of the SALT II accord and said this provided fresh justification for President Reagan's "Star Wars" program.

Weinberger confirmed the deployment of the new SS-25 missile in the course of attacking administration critics who believe "that arms control is a more ethically justifiable course of action than attempting to strengthen deterrence through defensive weapons."

"Recent history shows that arms control has hardly been a raving success," Weinberger told a conference sponsored by the Ethics and Public Policy Center, a conservative Washington think-tank.

Heart patient hanging tough

HERSHEY, Pa. (AP) — The first Penn State artificial heart recipient lapsed into critical and unstable condition Tuesday with reduced brain function, but later rebounded and spoke to his brother, doctors said.

"See if you can get me something to eat," was Anthony Mandia's request of his brother around midday, said Dr. John W. Burnside, a spokesman for the Hershey Medical Center.

"His level of consciousness is clearly higher."

The 44-year-old Mandia, who had been listed in critical and stable condition from the implant Friday until the setback, remained in critical and unstable condition Tuesday afternoon, said Burnside.

Student committee to structure biology of cancer class for spring

By Lynette Wong
Staff Writer

Students have the opportunity to help organize a biology of cancer course scheduled for spring quarter by becoming part of a student committee now being formed.

The committee is composed of five to 10 students who, in effect, run the course. They contact speakers, organize lecture times with them and select the textbook, said Jaime Colome, biological science professor.

"Each student is assigned to a speaker and is responsible for accommodations," Colome said. "The students (of the committee) also show up at each class to introduce the speaker."

Although the class is essentially run by the student committee, Colome said he acts as instructor of record. His duties include making sure the exam is made up and gets graded.

The biology of cancer course, Biology 300, is a general education course offered every spring quarter. It is sponsored by the biological sciences department and the American Cancer Society. Colome said the course covers the causes and effects of cancer and current research through weekly lecture series. The talks are given by professors from California universities who do cancer research and local medical doctors.

Colome said there is no prerequisite for the course and it is open to all majors.

"We try to cover all the major cancers. For instance, talks on factors that might prevent lung cancer," Colome said.

In addition to these types of speakers, Colome said sometimes they are fortunate to have cancer patients, either in remission or being treated for cancer, come and talk to the students about their experiences.

Colome said committee students receive two units of Biology 400 and the chairman of the committee earns four units. Students enrolled in the course receive two units of credit.

Colome said the course originated in 1979 by a request from the American Cancer Society. The organization informed the biology and chemistry departments this type of course was being instituted at other universities across the country and asked if these Cal Poly departments would be interested in implementing the same course.

"This is an excellent opportunity for students to meet with guest speakers and make contact with researchers at universities, practicing physicians, American Cancer Society personnel and with local hospice members," Colome said.

"Not many of us meet people with cancer. We're finding out the newest information on cancer."

A meeting will be held for those interested in joining the student committee Friday afternoon at 12:30 in Science North, Room 220.

Confused whale swims up dead-end channel

RIO VISTA (AP) — "E.T.," the confused humpback whale, meandered aimlessly Monday in a narrow dead-end channel, while scientists decided to take "a hands-off approach" to see if it would return on its own to the Pacific Ocean 70 miles away.

The 40-ton, 45-foot-long whale, which swam into San Francisco Bay about 10 days ago, has headed gradually northeastward through the fresh-water Sacramento River and its numerous sloughs and tributaries, watched by a steadily growing crowd of onlookers.

"He is actually awesome, isn't he?" said Dina Fields, a worker in a Rio Vista bait shop, who was among some scores of onlookers near Shag Slough. "It's really wonderful to see him, but you have to have mixed emotions. Everybody is sorry he is here," she said.

"It appears healthy; it's swimming vigorously," said Dana Seagars of the National Marine Fisheries Service. "It's probably living on its own fat reserves," he said, adding that "there is little in the river for it to feed on."

The whale remained Monday in narrow Shag Slough, an isolated narrow channel about 12 miles north of Rio Vista, said Petty Officer Jose Hernandez of the Coast Guard. He said the slough, which connects with the Sacramento River 18 feet deep.

The whale entered the slough, going under a narrow bridge, on Saturday.

Its journey into the slough afforded onlookers their best views to date of the huge mammal. The whale swam back and forth along the channel, as spectators watched it through binoculars and cameras.

Rio Vista is about halfway between San Francisco and Sacramento.

Seagars, a marine biologist, said scientists "feel it's time to begin taking a hands-off approach. The whale is a little stressed out. Hoping it will relax and find its way out of the slough on its own accord."

Joy McBride, a spokeswoman for the Marine Mammal Center in Sausalito, said biologists were considering trying to lure the animal seaward by employing a technique that has been used to herd porpoises out of shallow waters in Japan. The method involves tapping submerged pipes to create tones that persuade the animal to swim away.

Seagars said federal authorities were keeping the submerged-pipe sounds technique open as an option. "At this point, we're kind of holding that in reserve," he said.

Marine biologists have already unsuccessfully used several types of underwater sounds — including recorded music and sounds of female whales.

AV department links campus communications

More than just films and tapes

By Katie Britain
Staff Writer

Located beneath the Business Administration and Education Building, the audio-visual department provides the backbone for the communications network at Cal Poly, linking everything from instructional films to the alarm system that protects the campus.

A walk through the basement reveals enormous files lining the walls and endless rows of films along with video equipment that regularly appears between neatly stacked and filed material. The impression is one of a busy organization almost bursting with information.

"Yet even filled to capacity, the hardest job for the department is controlling demand," said Norman Johnson, assistant director.

Johnson, who has worked in the audio-visual department for 28 years, said the expectation for new technology in the classroom is high but typical state funding doesn't meet those demands. So instead they must set priorities with the services offered.

And with those resources the department provides a broad range of services that cover many needs on campus.

Audio-visual is separated into six interconnected departments. These are distribution, a library, a repairing film and audio-maintenance, a repair shop, a graphics and photography department and administration.

An allocation of $250,000 over the past years from the Long Beach Division of Information Systems at the Chancellor's Office has made possible the broad span of communications to which audio-visual is hooked up, Johnson said.

This cable, which carries electronic signals from the department, is also wired to the campus intrusion system and fire alarm, he said.

The same cable has enabled the audio-visual department to cover more areas than when it was first started in the late 1940s. Before then the school library had been responsible for the 16mm projectors that then made up electronic instruction at Cal Poly.

Once the projectors became a popular tool, audio-visual developed to handle scheduling, usage and maintenance as a separate department established by the State Department of Education.

The present complexity of the department extends much further than the simple film projectors once used in the classroom.

Johnson said a lot of the material is communicated electronically, for example through the television sets in each classroom.

"A new technology that is helpful for long distance instruction is a two-way teleconference via satellite," said Johnson.

In this way people who are unable to attend the university because of distance or time can still receive the same instruction via electronic signals.

"This has made instruction more available," said Johnson. "Technology has brought university education to the doorstep of many who couldn't have got it before."

As the technology advances instructors have more need of specialized equipment, said Johnson.

"The biggest revolution in instructional tools has been the videotape recorder," he said.

A camcorder, which is an all-in-one recorder, makes it convenient for instructors to record their own lessons.

Johnson gave the example of an instructor in business management who interviews presidents and vice-presidents in large corporations about techniques and management styles, then brings these films back to the classroom.

"The recorder provides a tremendous teaching tool in all areas of industry and agriculture," said Johnson. "The advantage is that every student can now be in an interview or situation that might have been denied that person."

Johnson was enthusiastic for the future of electronic instruction on and off campus. He said the audio-visual department will continue to provide an even broader instructional arm for students, allowing more specialized attention in the classroom.

Living in Cal Poly Poultry Unit — not just a place to learn

By Lynette Wong
Staff Writer

Some students envision a typical farm with cackling chickens, swarms of pestering flies and an ever-penetrating odor.

But for Cal Poly students John Boylan, Scott Noble and Ernie Peterson, living quarters at the Poultry Unit are as typical as an off-campus apartment or house.

Located at the north end of campus between the Crops and Foundation Dairy Unit, the two-bedroom residence looks similar to the exterior of a military barracks. The unit is equipped with modern accommodations — a conventional stove, refrigerator, running water facilities and wall heaters.

"There's nothing really different about our living quarters. People get the misconception that it smells out here. We're far enough away from the unit that it doesn't smell. We don't hear roosters in the morning, so our alarm clock has to be the one to get us up," said Boylan, a 24-year agriculture management major.

Noble, 23, a poultry industry major, and Boylan have been living at the Poultry Unit for the past two years. Their 21-year-old roommate, Ernie Peterson, also a poultry industry major, previously lived there two years ago and decided to return this year.

"This is similar to how I grew up on a farm in Wahiawa, Hawaii," Peterson said.

After returning from morning classes, typical afternoons include doing general maintenance work around the units such as cleaning the feed room and egg cleaning dock, scrubbing the machines, tidying-up the equipment and doing general repairs, Boylan and Noble said.

In addition to these chores, Noble said they keep watch on the unit during the day and evening to help prevent thefts which occur frequently.

"We've lost four turkeys this year," Noble said. "You develop pride. If something gets stolen, you take it personally."

Boylan and Noble said the main reason for living at the Poultry Unit is the "hands-on experience" they receive.

"I've always wanted to live out here," Boylan said. "I consider it a privilege. Being an ag management major, I've learned a lot about the poultry industry and how an egg ranch is run. When I first came out here, I knew nothing about the industry."

"It's a dynamic living environment," Noble said. "The living conditions are closely related to the poultry industry and its operations as a ranch manager. You gain an invaluable knowledge about the poultry husbandry."

Both said this experience has been beneficial for career development.

"It's good in respect to job opportunities that you've lived at the Poultry Unit. It's a plus," Noble said.

For Boylan, these living conditions have opened up another alternative in his major.

"It's created an option for me to go into the poultry industry," Boylan said.

"Being students, we're open to many opportunities, I feel that when an opportunity arises, a person should look into it rather than concentrate his efforts all in one area such as on agriculture. Now I'll know many different aspects of it."

Aside from these benefits, all three said they enjoy the peacefulness of the unit and the convenience of living so close to school.

"There's no parking problem and the walk isn't bad. It's only a quarter mile from school," Boylan said.

"You can see it (school), but you can't hear it," he added.

As in any living situation, there are always disadvantages that accompany the advantages. Boylan said they feel somewhat isolated from the social scene.

"This is not like an apartment complex. We don't have next door neighbors, so our social life is not centered where we live. Out here, our social environment is our roommates," Boylan explained.

However, in the outcome, Boylan said the advantages far outweigh the disadvantages.

Survey reveals opposition to alcohol ordinance

By Julia Prodis
Special to the Daily

The majority of Cal Poly students are opposed to a city ordinance which regulates alcohol in certain San Luis Obispo City parks, a student opinion poll conducted Oct. 10 shows.

The results showed 81 percent of males surveyed disagree with the ordinance and 58 percent of the females disagree.

One hundred and fifty students were polled in the University Union Plaza by the Center for Practical Politics, a research organization affiliated with the political science department. The survey team was composed primarily of political science students, working with the Center for Practical Politics.

The ordinance, enacted by the San Luis Obispo City Council in late September, requires that a permit be purchased through the Department of Parks and Recreation to drink alcohol in 10 city parks. Cuesta Park and most of Sinsheimer Park are not included in the ordinance.

The most significant results showed the majority of males who drink in the parks disagree with the ordinance while women who don't drink in the parks are in strong favor of the ordinance.

Those students who disagree with the policy believe that it is directed at controlling students and stopping parties in of other places for students to drink and they don't have to take over the parks," said Rebecca Ranjo, 21, a senior biological sciences student. "They could drink at home. There should be some places left that aren't littered with garbage from parties."

Dianne Long, director of the Center for the parks.

"I don't like it," said Mark Ortgies, 22, a senior physical education student. "I think it's too restrictive ... It's really characteristic of the town as a whole. I couldn't say anything positive about it."

Those who agree with the ordinance believe that students can find other places to drink besides public parks.

"I think it's good because there are a lot

Practical Politics, called the survey a success. "The Alcohol in the Parks opinion poll is just one of several projects the center is working on. The poll was written and administered by students. It's a great opportunity for them to put their education into practice."

Students in the Center for Practical Politics, who either receive academic credit or money for their research, are also involved in "Action Research" projects on the Homeless in San Luis Obispo and Hazardous Wastes.

Another statistic gained from the survey reveals that 75 percent of men over the age of 21 who drink in parks disagree with the policy. Those who disagreed with the ordinance said they did so because of a dislike of governmental control over individual behavior. Though almost half of the males under 21 were not fully aware of the ordinance, almost 90 percent of them disagreed with it, thinking it unnecessary.

In general, males who drink in the parks do so occasionally, both with organized groups and casually.

Of the females over 21 who drink in the parks, 70 percent disagree with the policy, primarily because they think it is directed at stopping parties. All female students under 21 surveyed are opposed to the ordinance mainly because it controls students and parties in the parks.

Most of the women who drink in the parks said they seldom do so and then it is primarily with an organized club or group.

Report lists many recommendations for higher education

By Jennifer Kildee
Staff Writer

Cal Poly is already implementing many recommendations that were listed in a report issued last month on higher education, said the university academic program planner.

"The article overall is right-on regarding higher education, but we're already doing many of the things it's recommending," said Walter R. Mark.

The report, "Higher Education and the American Resurgence," was written by Frank Newman, president of the Education Commission of the States, and a panel of seven advisers.

Issued by the Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching, the report recommends changes in student financial aid programs, access to higher education for members of minority groups, improvement of scientific research and technological development, and changes in undergraduate programs to make students more creative, entrepreneurial, and civic-minded.

In the report, Newman says federal spending on student aid should expand, but "the balance among differing types of student-aid programs should be altered" to reduce what he considers excessive dependence on loans.

Mark agrees. Without this dependence on loans, "students don't come out of college in debt," Mark said. "They have more freedom of choice. They don't have to take a high-paying job (to pay the loan back)."

"Also," Mark continued, "working your way through school helps maintain the old American ideal of the work ethic. When you finally achieve your goal, that's really satisfying."

Instead of continued expansion of loans, Newman calls for increases in the Pell Grant program and in various kinds of federally-financed work-study arrangements.

"I like the idea of expanding work study," Mark said. "With loans, you don't get much student interaction, but in work-study programs, students work in their department or in departments where their coursework is applicable," he said. "Students can take their classroom information and apply it to their campus jobs while they're still in school. The students can see the applicability of the theory (they're learning in the classroom)," he added.

Newman warns too many people assume the gains of the 1960s and 1970s "have done the job" in assuring access to higher education for members of minority groups.

However, he says, enrollments of blacks and Hispanics in higher education are no longer growing, and many of those who have gained access have not gone into professional and managerial fields.

"Both economic development and civic integration require the full participation of more than just an elite, particularly a white elite," Newman says. "This requires higher education to do a better job of drawing people from all segments of society into those programs that lead to positions of leadership in the life of the country," he adds.

"Well, Cal Poly is a classic example of that (low minority enrollment)," Mark said. "We have one of the lowest rates of enrollment of minorities in the California system ... This doesn't bode well for us." He added, "We need to make a real effort to attract Hispanics, and others."

One of the problems Cal Poly has in attracting minority students is that this campus doesn't have many minority alumni, Mark said. Also, there isn't a good community support base for minority groups in San Luis Obispo, he added.

Student selection at Cal Poly is based primarily on students' high school GPA and SAT (Scholastic Aptitude Test) scores, Mark said. "The statistics show that minorities have lower average test scores than whites, so if we use primarily test scores, we won't get the minorities. We're trying to overcome that," he said.

Student Academic Services offers several programs to help disadvantaged students, such as tutoring and parallel courses in science and math, Mark said.

Another program encourages high school students to take the classes that will prepare them for college, he added. "If minority students are not well-prepared, they may run the risk of the 'revolving door' syndrome. If they're in with well-qualified students, minority students may have a hard time competing," he added.

Newman calls for the creation of a new federal agency, the National Opportunity Fund, to provide grants to programs for disadvantaged students. The agency would "support programs within colleges and universities and emphasize programs that link these institutions to high schools."

"I'm not convinced that another agency is what we need," Mark said. "We have federal offices set up that are already doing what Newman proposes, but they're fragmented," he said. The danger in setting up more agencies, Mark said, is that less money ends up going into the programs; instead it goes into administrative costs.

While Newman acknowledges that the United States remains ahead of Japan and Western Europe in scientific research and technological development, he argues that it "cannot assume its continued leadership in either research or the translation of research to technology." He says universities must become more willing to "translate research into technology" and to develop effective links with industry.

Newman says too much attention has been focused on whether colleges and universities can produce the technical experts needed for new careers, and not enough on "whether graduates will have those capacities beyond technical expertise, or even beyond intellectual skills, that are now critical — the ability to be creative, the willingness to take risks, and the desire to participate constructively in the civic affairs of the country."

American higher education, Newman adds, has been too passive. "Students too frequently sit passively in class, take safe courses, are discouraged from risky or interdisciplinary research projects, and are discouraged from challenging the ideas presented to them."

"I think in lots of places that's true," Mark said. He compared the 300 to 400 freshmen chemistry students in a lecture hall at UC Berkeley to the 30 to 35 that would be found here, noting the higher potential for interaction between faculty and students at Cal Poly.

Creativity can be stimulated in many different ways, Mark said. "Architects have to be taught creativity, and engineers have to design. If they're not creative, what are they going to do? I don't think that just because Cal Poly is technological, we can't stimulate creativity," he said.

MUSTANG DAILY

Tailgaters show spirit before games

By Laura Rosenblum
Staff Writer

Cal Poly Mustang fans have much to learn about tailgating — not the kind of tailgating the police notice, but rather the kind which involves a pre-game celebration of food and drink served out of the back of a car.

Poly Grove, located on the west side of Mustang Stadium, provides a three-acre park setting for tailgaters to engage in pre-game celebrations. Cal Poly's homecoming game against St. Mary's College last weekend provided an occasion for a the first tailgaters of the year to break out the picnic baskets.

The largest group of tailgaters traveled quite a distance — a group composed of about 60 boisterous fans from St. Mary's College in Maraga. Tailgater Steve Will came to watch his nephew play for St. Mary's and to join in on the celebration out of the back of the group's mobile home. Will said tailgating and fifth quarter post-game parties are part of the football spirit at St. Mary's.

"There's probably more enthusiasm here — and we're the opposition," said Will. "Their (Poly's) party doesn't seem to be as vocal as ours," he said, pointing to a group of barbequers several hundred feet away.

In an area of three-acre park called the "rose garden," a gathering of eight couples settled down to a pre-game feast of chicken, potato salad, pimiento cheese sandwiches, fresh fruit, brownies, and an assortment of beer, wine and softdrinks.

"It's a typical southern tailgating menu," said Sue Bruley, wife of Duane Bruley, the dean of engineering at Cal Poly.

She along with Margaret Strom (wife of Jim Strom, the vice president of university relations at Cal Poly) whipped up the gourmet meal. Both women are from South Carolina where they tailgated together at various football games, but this was their first one at Cal Poly. The two women said there is more spirit and friendliness when people are able to have a party right out of their car. The small parking lot near the football stadium at Cal Poly prevents this and people usually have to carry their party items to the designated tailgating area, said Bruley.

"There's a bit more effort in carrying the food and blankets," said Bruley.

On-campus tailgating was introduced during the 1984 Cal Poly football season. The Cal Poly Alumni Association worked in conjunction with the Mustang Boosters, a group of private donors who support athletic events, to bring about a change in the campus alcohol policy and allow tailgate parties to take place.

"Just bringing it about was a challenge," said Bob Timone, a Cal Poly alumni officer. "It was a bold move on President Baker's part. 'In all honesty it's going along slowly — it's building. We feel it's added a new dimension to our football program.'"

The tailgating program has been plagued with a number of problems from its onset. Daniel Fulmer, president of the Mustang Boosters and a local podiatrist, said one major problem is that the Cal Poly administration does not fully support the activity.

"I don't think the administration is as behind our program as they could be," Fulmer said.

Second, Fulmer points out the general lack of knowledge about tailgating.

"People in this town don't seem to know what tailgating is."

Fulmer explained the time when guests invited to participate in a tailgate party came with money instead of food, hoping to buy their lunch. Fulmer said the membership of the Boosters needs to increase so that a more innovative program of athletic support and school spirit can get underway. He attributes the small membership of the group to a lack of organized advertising and recruiting on the part of the Mustang Boosters.

Under the new tailgating provision, people with permits can consume alcoholic beverages before daytime football games. To qualify for a permit one must be a member or invited guest of the Mustang Boosters, the Student Supporters of Mustang Athletic Teams or the Alumni Association. While students are normally excluded from drinking on Cal Poly's "dry" campus, they may partake in tailgating parties if they are of legal age and are a member or guest of a permit-carrying group, said Fulmer.

"Any student who's a member of Mustang Boosters can participate," said Fulmer.

All of the advocates stress that tailgating is a family-oriented event.

"We set out to make tailgating a family experience," said Timone. "It's meant to create an environment of celebration. Yes, alcohol is a part, but you must have a permit."

"Tailgating doesn't necessarily increase school spirit," Fulmer said. "Support of athletics is what is needed first and foremost, and it would be very nice if Cal Poly students could get involved in the program. Students are great for support of the team, but it makes me a little apprehensive that someone would tailgate and not go to the game."

Timone said, "The focus is on support of athletics, not just a place to have a party."

Fulmer emphasized that students should be members of either the Student Supporters of Mustang Athletic Teams or of the Mustang Boosters, in order to take part in tailgate parties.

The Alumni Association and the Mustang Boosters are working on ways to gather more participants for pre-game festivities. "Business Night" is a pre-game event in which businesses around the community are invited to tailgate as guests of the Boosters.

"This is held to generate not only more money but more enthusiasm for Cal Poly athletics," said Timone. "Money is number one but number two is to get people out there and get them enthusiastic. We want more guests to get broad participation."

Bike club offers fun rides for pedal pushers

By Sally Kinsell
Staff Writer

The Cal Poly bike club is sponsoring a 'death ride' to Tehachapi on Nov. 9. It is appropriately named as the distance is about 180 miles and includes 7,500 feet of climbing.

The ride will begin at 5:30 a.m. from the gym, and the route travels from San Luis Obispo towards Santa Margarita to Highway 58 and then continues on to Highway 5. This is the second year in a row the bike club has held a 'death ride.'

"Fifteen people entered the event last year, but only two finished," said Baker, publicity officer of the bike club. "The point is to try and finish by dark."

Baker added that the "death ride," like all other rides the bike club sponsors, is open to anyone, not just members of the club.

The club is also sponsoring a less serious event called the Halloween Ride, scheduled for Oct. 30. The bikers will ride through town during Farmer's Market dressed up in costumes.

The club sponsors fun rides every Saturday morning to places like Avila Beach for breakfast or Arroyo Grande for ice-cream, as well as more serious rides like mountain biking in Montano de Oro and long-distance tours.

The tours are usually held twice a year, once during fall quarter and again during spring quarter because of the nicer weather, said Baker. The riders carry all their equipment with them, such as food, clothes and sleeping bags, and travel at a relatively slow pace — about 60 miles a day so they can take the scenic routes.

Baker said, "It's just basically for the fun of riding."

The next tour planned is a ride to Big Sur during Veterans Day Weekend, including a visit to Hearst Castle. The ride is open to just about anyone who wants to go, Baker said.

The bike club also includes a racing team which competes in the California Collegiate Circuit. The training for the team begins late fall quarter and consists of 100 to 350 miles a week.

"Last year the team had about 40 people who actively raced," said Baker. "Cal Poly's team placed third in the state and one rider, Tony Ward, was state roadrace champion of the circuit."

CONCERT

The lawsuit, filed last week, claims Samuel and R&R Security custody and control over the crowd. The complaint says that up to 250 people damaged the hall by breaking windows, destroying roofing tiles, grinding glass and debris into the floor and pouring liquids into the piano.

The lawsuit seeks money for damages to the hall and an unspecified amount for future claims against the county.

Curt Sorg, county property manager, said the hall is available for use now, though all the damage isn't repaired. He said the county will probably be increasing deposits for dances of all types from $200 to as much as $1,000.

But Sorg said there will not be a ban on punk concerts and that the county was planning to raise the deposit on the hall anyway.

Police said the concert was oversold, but Samuel said only 525 tickets were sold.

Private travel agency in University Union

By Laurie Magin

Staff Writer

A privately-owned travel agency has replaced the former travel center in the University Union.

Cardillo Gulliver's Travel Centre began operation this quarter, offering students a wide variety of travel services. The former agency provided international travel services but did not deal with travel within the United States, said travel consultant Linda Field. The agency operated through a larger one located in San Francisco.

"It was fairly limited," said Field. "Students wanted Amtrak tickets, flights to Miami or Boise to see family. We couldn't provide that kind of service." Field added the agency wanted to expand their services and provide what the students needed.

Negotiations for the new contract were completed during summer quarter. "We negotiated on the contract to have a student program," said Field. "We didn't want to lose the developmental aspect for the students." Field said several local and out-of-town agencies placed bids for the contract, but Cardillo had the best offer. "It's quite a new idea," said Field, adding the travel center will be open all year, unlike the former agency which was closed during the summer.

The agency is run by two full-time travel agents and three student assistants. Glenn Ringer, student tour counselor, said the student aspect of the agency has not changed since the private organization was brought in. Counselors help to arrange tours for students, faculty and staff, as well as lead them.

Some past tours included a yacht cruise in the Bahamas, a "reggae sun splash" in Jamaica and a European tour. Scheduled tours this year include Tahiti, (already booked), New Orleans Mardi Gras and spring break trips to Hawaii and the French Alps. Ringer said the most popular destinations for students are Hawaii and Mexico, especially during winter break.

Students, faculty and staff interested in travel are invited to join the new travel club, New World Explorers Society. The club will hold its first meeting at 6 p.m. Nov. 5 in University Union Room 220. Meetings will then be held every other Tuesday night. The meeting will feature slides from around the world, plus speakers from airlines, cruise ships and other travel-related businesses.

Travel classes will also be sponsored and taught by the travel agency personnel. "We don't want to lose the student aspect of learning about travel," said Ringer.

A grand opening is scheduled for next month and will include doorprizes and chances to win travel prizes.

Senate preview

The Student Senate will vote on a resolution asking for improved busing service schedules and decide whether to approve the ASI and University Union 1984-85 audits at the meeting Wednesday night. The Senate will also discuss a resolution to begin a feasibility study for a Poly View Drive bike lane.

The meeting is at 7 p.m. in U.U. Room 220.

The improved busing service schedule resolution asks that the city revise bus schedules so that arrival and departure times coincide more closely with class schedules.

Copies of the audits are available for review in the ASI Business Office, Room 202 of the U.U.

The Poly View Drive bike lane resolution asks that the Parking and Traffic Committee begin studying the possibility of a bike lane on Poly View Drive, similar to the green bike lane on Via Carta. The committee will be asked to submit its report by the end of November, and if approved, the bike lane will be marked at the beginning of winter quarter.

Ten chosen for chance at the lottery millions

WHITTIER (AP) — Ten lucky $100 lottery winners were selected from among 6,250 on Tuesday for a chance at the California Lottery's $2 million roulette wheel spin Oct. 28.

"If I win, I'm going to make a big party," said winner Abed Jabaieh of Simi Valley, contacted by lottery Director M. Mark Michalko following the drawing. "I'm going to buy 100 cases of champagne."

When Michalko asked if he would be invited, Jabaieh responded: "You better believe it."

Jabaieh said he bought his winning ticket at the liquor store he owns. Deborah Frontino, wife of winner Joseph Frontino of Riverside, said her husband bought three tickets one evening when he stopped off for some beer following his swing shift at a local hospital.

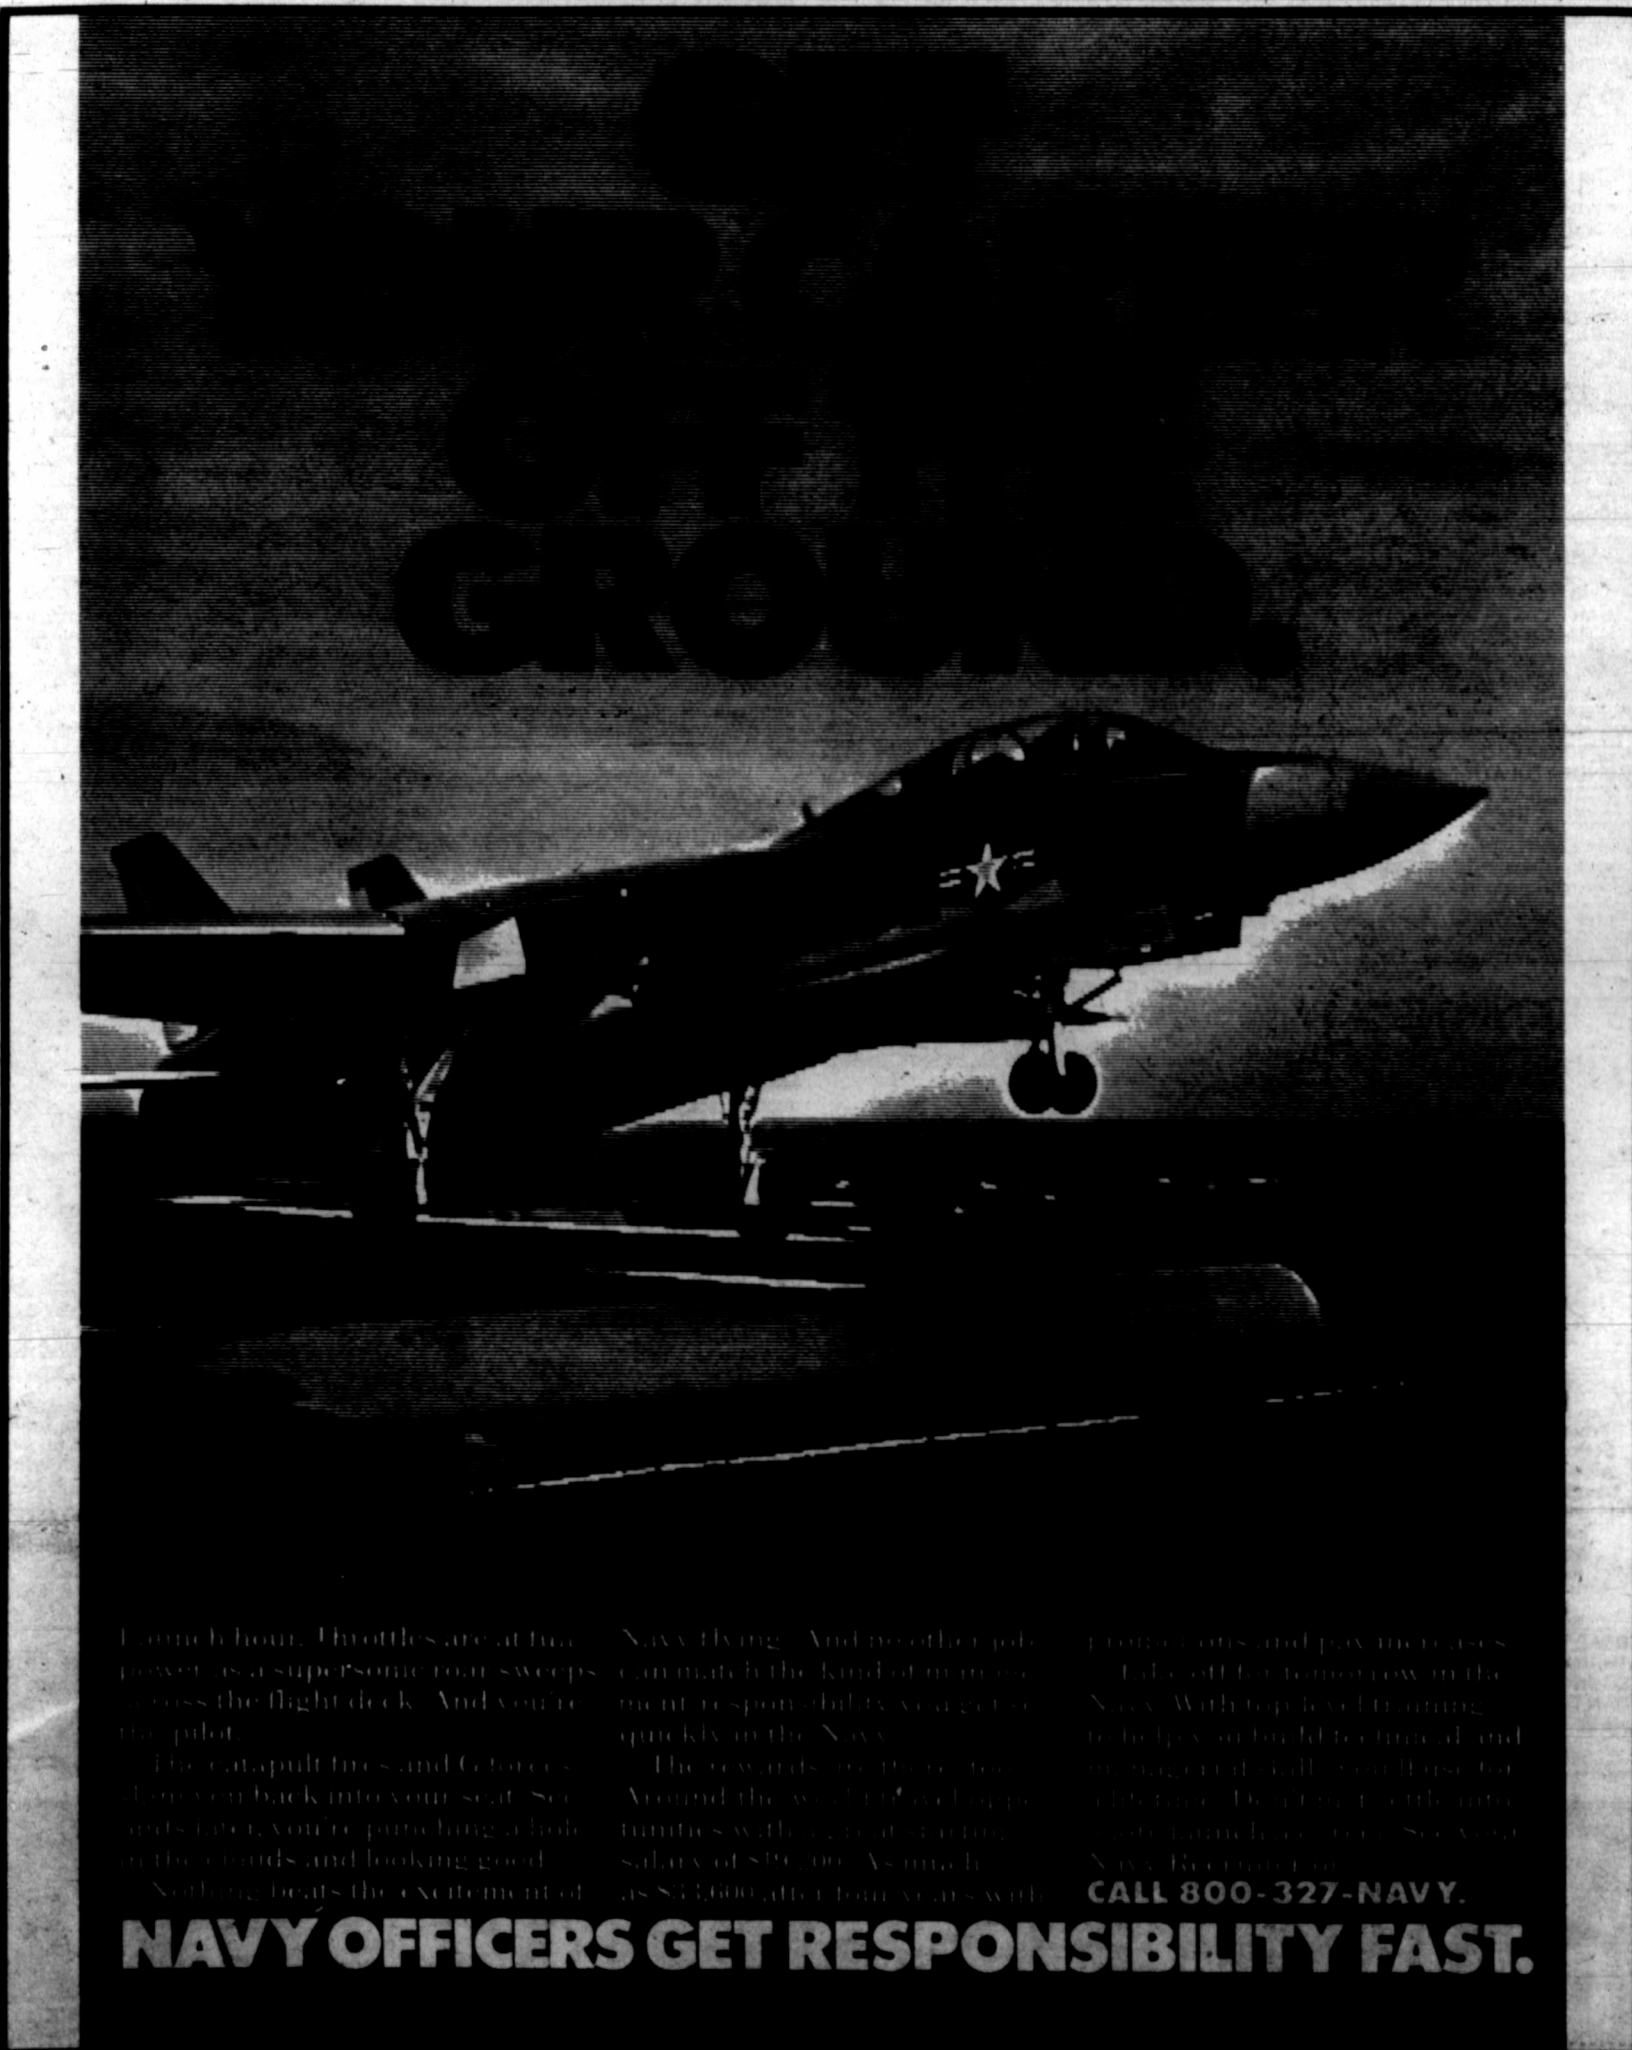

"He gave me one and kept two," Mrs. Frontino said, adding that one of the two her husband kept was the $100 winner. "I said, 'Thanks a lot!'"

Other winners selected Monday were Lorenzo Martinez of Huntington Park, Charles Moore of Beaumont, Richard Rhoads of San Diego, Daniel Cruz of Panorama City, Donna Sobb of Sacramento, Vernon Hensing of Chatsworth, Ben White of Los Angeles and Linda Scott of Jackson.

After agents ensure the 10 winners are eligible under state lottery rules, they will join 10 others selected last week for the roulette wheel spin, to be televised "right after Monday Night Football," said lottery Agent John Coleman.

The roulette wheel contains 100 slots, Coleman said, 10 for a $2 million prize, 20 for $100,000, 30 for $50,000 and 40 to $10,000, "so the least they can win is $10,000."

During Monday's drawing at a regional state lottery office in Whittier, Los Angeles City College President Estelle Feuers selected 10 sealed plastic capsules with numbers from inside from a giant plastic drum loaded with 6,250 such capsules.
